

My name is Beatrice Williams and I am a second year student at Harper & Keele Veterinary School. I decided to become a vet after spending much of the COVID-19 pandemic isolated in the Peruvian Amazon, then at college doing Animal Management.

I am passionate about genetics with a deep interest in how natural selection shapes the modern world, both on a macro and micro-scale with the development of AMR and innate disease resistance.

I wish to work with exotics and wildlife to understand the connection between the human and animal world and help a few more baby monkeys along the way.
